"Old Folks at Home." The old folks held the fort at Mrs. P. J. Fellinger's residence, 1110 Maryland avenue southwest, last night. The occasion was a tea and entertainment for the benefit of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, Rev. W. H. Gotwald, pastor. The young ladies of the church, with powdered hair and dress of "Audi Laug Syne," presented a unique and pleasing appearance, and looked as if they had just stepped out of an old print. Aunt Polly Bassett (Miss Susie Springman) of Squedunck Hollow Va., was very amusing and entertaining. Those in costume were: Mrs. Emma Sparro, Misses Ellen Akerman, Dalsy Fridley, Edith Hofman, Mamie Stinzing, Nellie Lang, Ida, Elith and Maud Sweeney, Messrs. D. Good Results. Good Results.

It is important to note some beneficial results of this method of feeding the poor. For one thing, business men, who are charitably inclined, have had a means of charitably inclined, have had a means of giving something to applicants for assistance without giving money, the use of which in undeserving cases to buy drink always deters kind-hearted people from giving at all. The soup house has made use freely of its tickets, so that business men generally when appealed to for heft from poor people have been able to give those tickets instead of money, and thus meet all moral requirements upon them without risk of doing harm.

It is noticeable, so the authorities state, that this method of charity has greatly reduced apparent evidences of extreme poverty and almost entirely done away-with street begging.

County.

To the Editor of The Evening Star:

There appeared in your edition of the Sth instant an article under the nom-deplume of "Taxpayer, Arlington P. O.," severely castigating the board of supervisors, the county superintendent and overseers of roads for their manner of working the same, and the inequality and apparent unfairness in the distribution of said work. Now, for the benefit and information of our friend, Taxpayer, I would state that it is only within a few years that a dollar's worth of road tax has been spent on what every one must acknowledge as the main road in Arlington district, leading from Washington to Falls Church and surrounding sections. I mean the road running west from Rosslyn and parallel with the river, and on which travel is largely in excess of that on any other road in the county. Beding the devicinity of Rosslyn, and so well "graveled oyster-shelled and most wonderfully improved." The improvements made on that portion of the road lying in the district of Arlington are mainly to be credited to the activity and public-spiritedness of a large-hearted and large taxpaying citizen whose domicile is on that road. (Would that such men were more numerous in our county.) The oyster-shelling referred to has been done under his personal supervision, almost entirely by his own teams, his own most entirely by his own teams, his own most entirely by his own teams, his own most entirely by his own teams, his own heart of the county of the supervision, almost entirely by his own teams, his own most entirely by his own teams, his own heart of the county of the road full most on the road holes for men to fall into when leaving the run holes of Arlington. "Power and Pathes of Dickens."—The Rev. D. J. Stafford, D. D., delighted an audience which filled Metzerott Hall last evening, with a lecture on "The Power and Pathos of Dickens." Dr. Stafford, quoting much from the works of Dickens, paid a most graceful and tender tribute to the great novelist. Charles Dickens, he said, made his characters much more than mere creations of his fancy, for he made them real, moving, livings beings, and he rejoiced with them in their joy, and suffered with them in their pain and grief. Dickens worked not for literary giory alone, but he labored that the world might be made better and happier, and he succeeded in making the world, when people wept at his Appointment of Committees.

Mr. G. O. Cook said he believed Shakespeare had said "Some people are born free, some have freedom and others have freedom thrust upon them." and he thought that if there were any who were not desirous of getting freedom they should have it thrust upon them. He thereupon noved the appointment of a committee to draft an address to the workingmen of the country and also to the members of Congress. The workingmen all over the country, he said, would then help in the way of looking after their Congressmen.

Mr. F. L. Siddons had an amendment to offer concerning the question of committees. He thought that there should be two committees, one a committee of three, appointed from the local labor organizations,

He said he admired The Star, and thought he paper was sincere in all its publications about the needs of the District, but he said he thought, and naturally so, that he paper is sometimes mistaken on the suffrage question.
He said that the star chamber proceedings of the Commissioners and also of the board of school trustees, as pointed out in The Star, will help the suffrage movement, and he, for one, was willing to endure those methods for a year, because then the suffrage movement will be so far advanced that the people will have the right of suffrage given them.
